Now after having some useful information about the great variety of food and drink in London, it's time to go for a walk and have a look at the shop in the city.

Well, shopping for clothes in London is probably more difficult than shopping for anything else, because the choice is so great. The Oxford Street department stores and fashion shops tend to follow the latest fashion in clothes without being too trendy and expensive. The quality is good but the lines are mass produced. For those who are looking for originality and perhaps something daring the boutiques have more to offer. Kings Road has the biggest selection of boutiques providing exciting designs of good quality. Stop the Shop is not expensive and is very popular with the young shoppers. Cecil Gee has well-made quality clothes for young men. Knightsbridge and Bond Street are the main shopping areas for most exclusive clothing shops. Harvey Nichols has stylish clothes for women over 30. Here everything is of high quality and the prices are also high. Jaeger in Regent Street has well-cut fashionable English clothes, particularly knitted garments.

The internationally famous fashion houses can only be visited by appointment. Hardy Amies has the very best immense clothes for the very wealthy. Norman Hartnell is based in Britain Street and designs outfits for some very famous people.

There are, of course, many more clothes shops of all kinds and a native Londoner will have his or her own favourites. Hopefully, this short outline will help point visitors on a short spending thrift in the right direction. And now a few words about books...
